The amount of total costs awarded to the RCMI Program for its 2011-2016 budgetary cycle.

We are proud to announce the release of our newly redesigned website for the Research Centers in Minority Institutions (RCMI) Program. By updating our main site: (<http://rcmi.rcm.upr.edu>) we can share information about Program goals, objectives and activities; inform visitors about events relevant to research being conducted within and outside the UPR Medical Sciences Campus, and provide detailed information related to the research facilities supported by the RCMI Program.

The website will be updated on a regular basis, with news of events, recent publications, new research resources and important research accomplishments. We expect to provide more options and information each time, as well as a unique tools for disseminating advances in research infrastructure and highlighting investigators contributions to collaborative research in health disparities.

The portal is produced, hosted and maintained by CentIT2, the Center for Information Technology and Telecommunications. CentIT2, a research resource supported by the RCMI Program.

About the RCMI Program: The RCMI Program is a federally funded initiative (8G12-MD007600, NIMHD-NIH) . Since its inception in 1986, the RCMI Program has developed and strengthened the research infrastructure at the UPR Medical Sciences Campus by expanding human and physical resources for conducting basic biomedical and behavioral research. Dr. Emma Fernández-Repollet, Professor, School of Medicine, serves as Principal Investigator of the Program.

About CentIT2: The RCMI Center for Information Technology and Telecommunications (CentIT2) provides researchers at the UPR Medical Sciences Campus with access to updated resources of information and with a telecommunications infrastructure that facilitates interdisciplinary research, professional development, and global interactions. CentIT2 is directed by Dr. José G. Conde, Professor, School of Medicine.
